2025 LOVE DATA WEEK SPEAKER

Lisa Johnston

University of Wisconsin-Madison

Director of Data Governance

Lisa R. Johnston is the director of Data Governance at University of Wisconsin Madison leading the campus institutional data governance program. This role involves chairing the Data Governance Council, establishing and executing strategic priorities for the program, and collaborating with the institutional data stewards across data domains. Prior to this, Johnston worked at University of Minnesota for 15 years in many roles including director of the University of Minnesota's Data Repository and principal investigator/founder for the Data Curation Network (https://datacurationnetwork.org/). Teaching and research interests include data literacy, data management, data ethics, and data curation. Johnston holds a Bachelor of Science in Astrophysics and a Master of Library Science (MLS), both from Indiana University.